Kimsey and Sharpe receive honors from Air Mobility Command

CHEYENNE, Wyo. – Master Sgt. Ann Kimsey and Tech. Sgt. Geoffrey Sharpe, members of the Wyoming Air National Guard's 187th Aeromedical Evacuation Squadron, received special recognition from the Air Mobility Command Inspector General on June 6.

The accolades were presented during an outbrief culminating a week of intensive scrutiny by the Aircrew Standardization Evaluation Team. The awards were presented by Col. Bill Bradley, team chief, after the 153rd Airlift Wing demonstrated complete mission ready status, receiving its overall grade of satisfactory.

Kimsey has been a member of the Wyoming Air National Guard for 13 years and is the squadron first sergeant. She was honored for administrative support provided to the team during their weeklong visit to the wing.

Sharpe has been a member of the Wyoming Air National Guard for six years and is the noncommissioned officer in charge of medical aircrew training. He was honored for his aircrew training program labeled a "benchmark;" a program for all 31 worldwide aeromedical evacuation squadrons to emulate.

“This inspection proved what we already knew but are proud to show, we are mission ready,” said Col. Steve Rader, 153rd Operations Group commander. “I am proud of all the hard working men and women out here who keep us mission ready every day.”
